NATURAL RESOURCES CONSERVATION SERVICE:

<http://www.nrcc.usda.gov/>

The Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) (formally, the Soil Conservation Service) is the federal agency that works with landowners on private lands to conserve natural resources. NRCS helps farmers and ranchers develop individual conservation systems suited for their land and agriculture business. This is where most of the technical assistance is provided by the NRCS. Rural and urban communities also rely on the agency to help reduce erosion, conserve and protect water, and solve other resource problems.

Many partners also help NRCS set conservation goals, work with the people on the land, and provide assistance where needed. These partners work for conservation districts, state and federal agencies, NRCS Earth Team volunteers, Americorps members, agricultural and environmental groups and professional societies.

There are 3,000 conservation districts, one in almost every county. These local units operate on the premise that local people know the most about local needs. They link NRCS with their neighbors and with local priorities for soil and water conservation. They also augment the work of NRCS's conservationists with districts programs and with their own technical and support staff.

NRCS employees have the technical expertise and field experience to help land users solve their natural resource challenges and maintain and improve their economic viability. Employees are highly skilled in many scientific and technical specialties, including soil science, soil conservation, agronomy, biology, agroecology, range conservation, forestry, engineering, geology, hydrology, cultural resources, and economics.

ECOLOGICAL SCIENCES DIVISION:

<http://www.nhq.nrcs.usda.gov/BCS/esd.html>

The Ecological Sciences Division (ESD) is part of the Science and Technology Deputy Chief area of NRCS at National Headquarters. ESD develops and recommends policies, guidelines, and procedures for the technical aspects of issues relating to agriculture, ecology, cultural resources, environment, and energy. ESD staff provide the overall technical framework for implementing natural resources enhancements, sustainable production, pollution abatement, and environmental and cultural resource assessments in NRCS conservation planning and practice application activities. The majority of the staff is located in Washington, DC.

CULTURAL RESOURCES:

<http://www.nhq.nrcc.usda.gov/BCS/culture/cultural.html>

Cultural resources are the traces of all past activities and accomplishments of people that includes designated historic districts, archeological sites, buildings, structures, and objects. These also include less tangible forms like aspects of folklife, traditional or religious practices, and landscapes. These nonrenewable resources often yield unique information about past societies and environments, and can provide answers for modern day social and conservation problems.

Because of their importance to the public and the Nation's heritage, several laws have been passed in Congress governing the consideration and protection of cultural resources. Most notable is the National Historic Preservation Act which mandates federal agencies develop a preservation and compliance program to avoid adverse impacts during agency activities. Since the Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) provides assistance which affects these resources, a national agreement was developed with the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation (AHP) and the National Conference of State Historic Preservation Officers (NCSHPO) for agency compliance while working on private lands. NRCS also has supplemental state agreements with each State Historic Preservation Officer (SHPO) to work out local or specific arrangements.

NRCS provides assistance to people and communities to protect, maintain, and improve natural resources. Cultural resources are considered in this work because NRCS recognizes that cultural resources are an integral part of the Nation's heritage. The stewardship of these nonrenewable resources is an important link in the conservation ethic that underlies the NRCS mission. Agency policy stresses that cultural resources be identified early in planning and alternatives to protect and conserve these resources are in place to be considered as part of the planning. Policy also encompasses guidance about training employees, informing landowners, and working with local, state, and other federal agencies and the public for the protection of significant cultural resources. Also included are procedures, standards, and guidelines for performing cultural resources research, survey, evaluation, protection, data recovery, mitigation, enhancement, emergency work, interpretation, and curation. Traditional Cultural Properties and human burials have slightly different considerations in terms of procedures, legal aspects, Department emphasis and consultation with Native American Tribes, Hawaiians, and Alaskans.

The main Cultural Resources Management (CRM) program goal is to ensure that cultural resources are considered and integrated into all NRCS actions and programs. Among the objectives of NRCS are to provide national leadership in the protection of cultural resources on private lands by utilizing conservation technology, tools, and programs to promote resource stewardship.

The CRM program for NRCS includes Specialists in National Headquarters, and Specialists and /or Coordinators in each state office. These Cultural Resources Specialists (CRSs) and Coordinators (CRCs) work with NRCS employees, conservation districts, and landowners in applying federal and state regulations, as well as agency policy and procedures to protect significant cultural resources. CRSs and CRCs also work closely with the SHPO and other state agencies, private organizations, Department of the Interior, and ACHP to implement new requirements, develop compliance strategies, and establish partnerships and cooperative agreements. If you have any questions pertaining to NRCS programs or activities please contact your nearest state Specialist or Coordinator. For additional information see our Web site at <http://www.nhq.nrcc.usda.gov/BCS/culture/cultural.html>.

Directory Changes

How can you be sure that this directory is always up-to-date? All new information will be added to the HTML and Adobe Acrobat version of the directory which is located on the the Cultural Resources webpage. (The Adobe Acrobat version will appear just as the printed version.) Those who are part of the directory will be notified of changes through email, fax, or phone. Otherwise, keep a running copy of the directory by checking the webpage for changes and then adding those changes to your personal copy. Printing the HTML directory from the homepage is also possible. If you need printing information or assistance, contact us at the Ecological Sciences Division.
